Taps into: Students' social support group.

 Resources needed: 2 sheets of A4 paper; colored pencils; scissors; "My inner circle" activity sheet.

Introduce the activity

Part 1. No man is an island. In most things we do in a regular day, we rely on people who are close to us, which we can see as our inner circle. They are the people we want to share our thoughts, our feelings, our achievements but also our failures.

They are those who have our back, some at home, some at school, some in other areas in our lives. Our inner circle of people is our social support group, meaning the people who are there for us when we need them and who we can turn to for advice, a kind word, or just to be with in silence.

Part 2. How is our inner circle built? How are the people close to us connected? While we need to understand who these people are, it is also important to have a clear understanding, like a map, of how they are connected to support us.

Do the activity

Part 1.

Each of you received a piece of paper. First think about this: "Who are the people in my inner circle? Who has my back and is there for me when I need them?". Then, write down the names of the people you thought about.

Do the activity

Part 2.

Now I will give each of you another sheet of paper. Draw on this paper as many circles as people you listed in your inner circle. Each circle should have a diameter of approx. 10 cm. If you need an additional sheet, let me know. Then cut out the circles and write down and/or draw in each circle a person you previously thought about.

Part 3.

I am now giving each of you the "My inner circle" activity sheet. Please place you circles in planetary system you received. If more than one circle goes in the same place, it's quite OK.

Tips for teachers

Encourage students to take one or two minutes to think about what they like about their inner circle.

Explain why few people in our lives are there for us every time, no matter what we do. Some people are in our inner circle only in some parts of our lives (like your classmates who are also your friends) while others may be there all the time, like your parents or siblings.

Look at your inner circle. Who is at the core of your inner circle? Why did you place them there?

Take 1–2 minutes to look at your inner circle and think about these people. Are they family, classmates, friends? What do they do when they are there for you?

My inner circle Activity Sheet

